Fall 2007

V55.0414, Conversations of the West: Antiquity and the 19th Century—Writing Intensive

Professor Vincent Renzi
903C Silver Center
212–998–8071
vincent.renzi@nyu.edu
Office Hours: Mondays, 2:00–3:00 p.m., Thursdays, 10:00–11:00 a.m., and by appointment.

Lecture:
§001: Mondays & Wednesdays..... 11:00 a.m. – 12:15 p.m.……..19 University Place, room 102

Preceptor
Beth Kramer
bek212@nyu.edu
Office Hours: by appointment.

 Linked Sections of V40.0100, Writing the Essay:
§014: Tuesdays & Thursdays ......... 9:30 a.m. – 10:45 a.m.……..Bobst Library, room 436
§015: Tuesdays & Thursdays ......... 2:00 p.m. – 3:15 p.m.……..Bobst Library, room 536s
§016: Tuesdays & Thursdays ......... 11:00 a.m. – 12:15 p.m.……..Bobst Library, room 536s
§017: Tuesdays & Thursdays ......... 12:30 p.m. – 1:45 p.m.……..Bobst Library, room 536s
§018: Tuesdays & Thursdays ......... 3:30 p.m. – 4:45 p.m.……..Bobst Library, room 536s
§019: Tuesdays & Thursdays ......... 1:45 p.m. – 3:00 p.m.……..Bobst Library, room 537
§020: Tuesdays & Thursdays ......... 11:00 a.m. – 12:15 p.m.……..Bobst Library, room 537
§021: Tuesdays & Thursdays ......... 8:00 a.m. – 9:15 a.m.……..Bobst Library, room 436

Writing the Essay Instructors:
Bruce Bromley (§§ 015, 021)       Kimberly Bohman (§§ 017, 018, 020)
bdb4945@nyu.edu                    kbk1@nyu.edu

William McCormack (§§ 014, 016, 019)
wqm6719@nyu.edu

Website:
http://www.nyu.edu/classes/renzi

Thematic Description

Some problems about justice, suggested by an extended reading of Plato’s Republic: What is justice? Where does it come from? What does it mean to lead a just life? In examining these questions Plato reminds us that if we knew the answers they would not be problems, and also that it seems impossible to search for what one does not know. It looks, therefore, as if we are necessarily bound to start with the wrong or with ill-formed questions. With this Platonic paradox in mind, our constant supplement is Nietzsche’s Genealogy of Morality—an approach which leads us to consider whether it isn’t rather something other than justice that we were seeking all along.
Overview

As one of the first courses in the Foundations of Contemporary Culture, Conversations of the West serves as an introduction to the study of the liberal arts. The course has a number of complementary goals.

First, it provides N.Y.U. undergraduates with a common academic experience on which to draw both in interactions with one another and in later academic work. Although we share some readings with other sections of Conversations of the West, this core experience is defined not so much by a canon of texts as by a shared concern to introduce you to modes of humanistic inquiry.

Second, because the course is intended for students early in their college careers, heavy emphasis is placed on building your ability to reason soundly and to analyze texts critically. The work you complete for lecture will be closely coordinated with that in the linked sections of Writing the Essay (on which more below), as both courses aim at fostering these skills as well as your ability to communicate effectively in writing and in discussion.

Third, Conversations of the West seeks to develop your appreciation of the cultural relevance of selected works in the humanities. Although we shall be concerned to situate works in their respective historical contexts, the course is not a survey of “great books” definitive of the (putative) Western cultural tradition. Instead, our purpose is to understand how works can be interpreted as constituting a tradition or history and to consider various attempts to define what a culture is or might be. I have chosen the texts for this class with a view to their relevance to this project and to one another, and because they are challenging materials on which to build academic skills. I do hope that you will come away from the class with an appreciation of their artistic and philosophical merits; but as to whether any are “great books,” I leave it to you to discover if they engage you greatly.

Finally, this class will consider themes, concepts, and ideas of enduring influence and interest. We will be concerned, for example, to examine the different ways the creators of the works we shall study have understood our history, human nature, place in the world, and individuality. Our investigation is thus humanistic in precisely this sense, namely that it leads us to consider fundamental aspects of our human condition; and the modes of inquiry we shall employ should help you appreciate the extent to which our human self-understanding in turn reflects particular views of history and human society. This investigation is therefore liberal in the sense that it seeks to free us from our accidental historical circumstances, allowing us to gain a greater perspective on the possibilities of human existence.

The spirit of liberal education that finds expression in these course goals is itself an excellent example of the influence exerted on our contemporary society by ancient ideals—in this case derived from Classical Greece. Among the ancient Greeks we find articulated the duplicate concern for a purpose to learning greater than rote mastery of information and for an education that aims to achieve such happiness as derives from understanding our humanity, not merely the fame or profit that comes of technical competence. In this spirit, no direction will here be given for the pursuit of any special study or particular profession; neither will you learn strategies for success in commerce or politics. In this sense the course is entirely impractical in its design; but there are good reasons to think this liberality will nevertheless provide the best preparation for your future endeavors: The skills you learn here are not restricted only to one line of work but are general in their application, and the emphasis is not on mastery of a fixed body of knowledge but rather on preparation for a life of learning. I cannot claim, more than this, that the course will make you happy; but the not immodest hope shared by many of the authors we shall study is that their works should help you be so. Seen in these ways, the class is preeminently practical, preparing you to flourish in dynamic circumstances in your later studies and professional work, and also, perhaps, for the hard task of deciding what sort of person you will be and what sort of life you will lead. Of course, we cannot presume to measure your humanity. Your overall grade will therefore be based on essays you will write about the works we shall study and your knowledge of basic facts necessary to their interpretation; but your education, I hope, will continue beyond your satisfaction of the course requirements.
Organization

This section of Conversation of the West is offered in conjunction with selected sections of Writing the Essay. Unlike other Conwest courses, there are no recitations for this class. While the lack of recitations results in fewer total contact hours than if the courses were taken in their regular versions, students and faculty have consistently reported that they find the Conwest-E.W.P. linkage to be a more intensive academic experience than if the courses were taken separately. The linkage arrangement is therefore recommended only for students who are seeking a challenging, innovative approach that promises a deeper engagement with the Conwest texts and more attention to writing about them than the usual arrangement could provide.

Please note that you must be registered for one of the sections of Writing the Essay specified above. Similarly, should it be necessary for a student to withdraw from one of side of the linkage, he or she must withdraw from the other as well.

The essence of the arrangement is this: The linked sections of Writing the Essay will share the Conwest reading list (supplemented by some additional texts), while the workshops—meeting twice weekly—provide for the discussion and writing that otherwise would have occurred in the once-a-week recitation. Professor Bromley serves as the course director for the Expository Writing side of the linkage, and we have worked closely together on coordinating the readings and assignments. During the term, I and the E.W.P. instructors will likewise be collaborating on assignments and grading. At the end of the term, grades will be assigned separately for Conwest and for your writing workshop; however, in calculating your grades we will be considering your work in both courses. While the present linkage has the benefit of past successes, we are committed to making this term the best experience we can for you, and we will be actively adjusting the links between the two sides to that end as the semester progresses.

Apart from the innovation of the linkage, the structure for the course will still most likely differ from that of classes you had in primary and secondary school. Those classes usually meet daily in small groups, provide close direction of your studies, and seek to prepare you with skills and knowledge necessary for later work. By contrast, university-level lecture courses meet less frequently, ask you to synthesize information from a variety of sources, and require you to recognize independently what you need to know to understand the complexity of an idea—and expect you to take the initiative to learn it.

As with any course, you will get the most out of this class if you prepare in advance. This means doing more than skimming the reading. When you read, you should highlight passages of particular importance and make notes about questions you have or points in the text that you feel bear further exploration. Although the lecture is not primarily intended for discussion, I encouraged you to ask questions both about the readings and about the lectures themselves. Most importantly, after class you should review your notes and re-read the texts.

Because the lecture brings everyone together, it is the best place for me to give you general information, to demonstrate its relevance to the interpretation of the works we are studying, and to discuss broad themes common among them. By contrast, the small size of the workshops makes them ideal for specific discussion of the texts and for personal attention to your development. The homework assignments and papers are intended to build your interpretative skills and to provide a basis for discussion. You should come both to lecture and to your workshops prepared to discuss the readings and what you have written about them.

The workshops provide the occasion for focused engagement with your course work and should help you to integrate the information presented in the lecture with your own insights and those of your classmates. This said, the real learning in any course occurs outside of class, as you continue to grapple with the material on your own—in your conversations with friends, in moments of quiet contemplation, and in re-reading the texts—and in writing your papers and exams.
Requirements

You are expected to read each of the works listed below, to attend all lectures and meetings of your writing workshop, to arrive at class meetings promptly, and to participate actively and appropriately in class. In-class writing exercises and brief homework assignments will also be required, as well as some supplemental reading. Finally, you will be required to sit for three examinations, two midterm and a comprehensive final.

In determining your grade, we will weigh your completion of the course requirements approximately as follows; bear in mind, however, that you are expected to complete every assignment in order to receive a passing grade for the class.

- Class participation & homework ................................................................. 20%
- Writing the Essay papers and participation............................................... 40%
- Midterm Exam ............................................................................................. 15%
- Final Exam ................................................................................................... 25%

Note well that a failing grade may be assigned to any student with three absences from lecture. Late work and electronic submissions will not be accepted. Incompletes will be considered only in cases of documented medical emergency or other, comparably grave circumstances. In the event that you are for good reason unable to attend lecture, you are expected to contact me in advance (or as soon as is practicable) by telephone or e-mail.

A Note on Classroom Decorum

As a matter of courtesy to the instructors and your fellow students, please arrive at class promptly, and, apart from emergencies, please remain in the classroom for the duration of the lecture.

Please be sure to shut off all pagers and cellular telephones at the beginning of class.

Recording & Transcription

While you are encouraged to take notes in lecture, you may not make audio tapes or any other kind of recording in class. Neither may you take or exchange class notes in return for remuneration. Violation of this policy will result in a failing grade for the course.
The following texts are required. The course pack is available for purchase from Unique Copies, 252 Greene Street. Book have been ordered through the N.Y.U. Book Center. Be certain to purchase exactly those listed below.

Schedule of Classes

Please complete the readings prior to the lecture at which they are first discussed. Be sure to bring the appropriate texts to class.

W 9/5: Introduction.

M 9/10: Nietzsche, Genealogy of Morality, Preface, Essay I.
W 9/12: Aristotle, Poetics; Euripides, Medea.

M 9/17: Book of J.

M 9/24: Republic, Book I.
W 9/26: Republic, Books II–IV.

M 10/1: Marx, “Economic and Philosophic Manuscripts of 1844.”
W 10/3: Marx & Engels, Communist Manifesto.

M 10/8: [Holiday.]
W 10/10: Midterm Examination I.

M 10/15: Sophocles, Oedipus.

M 10/22: Augustine, Confessions, Books I–X.
W 10/24: Augustine, Confessions, Books I–X.

W 10/31: Freud, Civilization & Its Discontents.

M 11/5: Nietzsche, Genealogy of Morality, Essay II.

M 11/12: Plato, Apology.
W 11/14: Plato, Republic, Books V–VII.

M 11/19: Midterm Examination II.
W 11/21: [Quodlibetal day.]

M 11/26: Kierkegaard, Fear & Trembling.
W 11/28: Kierkegaard, Fear & Trembling.

W 12/5: Plato, Republic, Books VIII–X.

M 12/10: Conclusion.
W 12/12: Review.

M 12/17: Final Examination.
Note time: 10:00–11:50 a.m.
Location T.B.A.