Course description

Known for its beauty, cultural vitality, and diverse mix of peoples, cultures, and languages, the Caribbean is where today's globalization began some 500 years ago, and where the idea of "modernity" took shape. Its sugar economy and colonial history of slave labor and indenture made it the site of massive transplantations of peoples and cultures from Africa for four centuries, from Asia and the Middle East for two centuries, and, throughout, a sizeable influx of peoples from Europe.

This course examines Caribbean colonial and postcolonial histories and cultures, focusing on the relationship between processes of development and exploitation of the region. It also explores local ideas about race, class, culture, gender, and sexuality, which both justify and challenge these processes. We will tack between the past and the present, in order to better understand the relationship between historical and contemporary forces. Our coverage will be interdisciplinary, and will include ethnographic and other non- fiction works, fiction, and films.

Required reading (in campus bookstore)

- (1) Jamaica Kincaid, A Small Place
- (2) L. Kaifa Roland, Cuban Color in Tourism and La Lucha: An Ethnography of Racial Meanings
- (3) Course pack, Cultures & Contexts: Caribbean
